October

2019

The first month of Preschool is behind us. Everyone is settling into classroom routines and forming new Preschool friendships. If you have noticed that there are days when your child comes home from school with no art project in hand (and they may even say they did "nothing" when asked what they did during the morning), don't worry! Children learn in many ways and playing with friends (both old and new) is one opportunity for learning. Some children are still exploring all areas of the room and don't have time for everything.... This, too, is a process through which they learn about making choices. Cutting, coloring, painting, gluing, etc., are all ways of learning, but the process of cutting, coloring, painting, gluing, etc. is much more important to a 3-5 year old than the finished product. Some finished products may look quite vague to an adult, but provide great pride in the eyes of a child. Our job is to provide your child with opportunities for learning and socialization. If they come home happy, then we've had a successful morning. We hope that if you have any questions, you will share them with us!
